countrymen to the study of these excellent works, and to furnish them with the means of pursuing it. In his notes and prefaces, he manifests a desire to raise the tone of thought and sharpen the sense of duty among his fellow-citizens. We would commend him to a more prudent estimate of his own resources, and, in his future translations, to a scrupulous avoidance of all foreign works about which he finds "a scholastic air."

ERRATUM.

On page 44 of this volume (N. A. Review for January, 1846), in the sentence quoted from Professor Stuart, 7th line from the bottom, for passive read jussive. The sentence will then be read as follows:—"Professor Stuart, of Andover, thinks the Hebrew for 'shall be shed' is 'the most jussive form which the language admits.'"
